Preface

The seventh edition of Who's Who of American Women represents the efforts of Marquis editors to keep pace with the steadily expanding role of women in American life. It reflects the significant progress that women have made in all fields of human endeavor, and it seeks to call attention to women whose achievements have not, heretofore, been recognized on this scale.

The names recorded on these pages are the result of the combined efforts of Marquis' highly skilled staff of researchers, writers, and editors plus the aid of expert consultants throughout the world. Through continuing examination of newspapers, magazines and journals, books by and about women, and the output of all other communications media; and through correspondence with research associations, national organizations, and other institutions and individuals who know best the most eminent women in current world affairs, the editors have compiled this present listing.

In the majority of cases, the women listed in Who's Who of American Women have furnished their own data. This information is reviewed by the Marquis staff before being written in sketch form. A prepublication proof of the sketch is then sent back to the biographee for final verification. The verified sketch, when returned to Marquis Who's Who, is rechecked and put into final form. In many cases where individuals fail to furnish their own data, the Marquis staff completes the information through careful original research. Sketches compiled in this way are indicated by an asterisk.

The task of putting together this volume demands a keen knowledge of all aspects of human activity. Marquis Who's Who is uniquely qualified to provide this knowledge as publishers of Who's Who in America (thirty-six editions in seventy-three years); Who Was Who in America; Who's Who in the World; and other specialized reference works of national or international scope.

The question is often asked, "How do people get into any Who's Who volume?" Name selection is based on one principle: reference value. Many individuals are eligible by virtue of position achieved through election or appointment to office; others have distinquished themselves in business, the professions, the fine arts, science, politics, entertainment, and athletics. Therefore, in the editorial evaluation that resulted in the ultimate selection of the names for Who's Who of American Women, an individual's desire to be listed was not a determining criterion for inclusion; rather it was the individual's demonstrated merit that ruled. Similarly, wealth or social position does not guarantee selection; only occupational stature or demonstrated ability in some particular field earn recognition. It is a fact that many of the biographees are engaged in fields marked far more by service than by monetary reward.

Thus the seventh edition of Who's Who of American Women carries on the tradition of excellence established with the publication of the first edition of Who's Who in America. The essence of that tradition is Marquis' unceasing effort to produce reference works responsive to the needs of their users throughout the world.

Standards of Admission

The foremost consideration in determining who will be admitted to the pages of Who's Who of American Women is the extent of an individual's reference value throughout the world. Such reference interest is judged on either or both of two factors: (1) The position of responsibility held and (2) the level of achievement attained by the individual.

Admissions based on the factor of position include:

Heads of state

Pre-eminent governmental figures

Ambassadors and ministers plenipotentiary

Consuls general

Administrators at important diplomatic posts

High ranking military officers

High ranking legal officials

Prominent figures from business, the professions, and the arts

Heads of leading philanthropic, educational, and scientific societies

Chief scientists

Outstanding educators from major universities and colleges

. . . plus many other individuals similarly chosen because of incumbency or membership

Admission based on individual achievement, on the other hand, must be decided by a judicious process of evaluating qualitative factors. To be selected on this basis, a person must have accomplished some conspicious achievement—something that distinguishes her from the vast majority of her contemporaries. She may scarcely be known in the local community but may be widely recognized in some special field of endeavor. Such a person often is one whose work is better known than she is herself.

ALPHABETICAL PRACTICES

Names are arranged alphabetically according to the surnames, and under identical surnames according to the first given name. If both surname and first given name are identical, names are arranged alphabetically according to the second given name. Where full names are identical, they are arranged in order of age—those of the elder being put first.

Surnames, beginning with De, Des, Du, etc., however capitalized or spaced, are recorded with the prefix preceding the surname and arranged alphabetically under the letter D.

Surnames beginning with Mac are arranged alphabetically under M. This likewise holds for names beginning with Mc; that is, all names beginning Mc will be found in alphabetical order after those beginning Mac.

Surnames beginning with Saint or St. all appear after names that would begin Sains, and such surnames are arranged according to the second part of the name, e.g., St. Clair would come before Saint Dennis.

Surnames beginning with prefix Van are arranged alphabetically under letter V.

Surnames containing the prefix Von or von are usually arranged alphabetically under letter V; any exceptions are noted by cross references.

Compound hyphenated surnames are arranged according to the first member of the compound.

Compound unhyphenated surnames common in Spanish are not rearranged but are treated as hyphenated names.

Since Chinese names have the family name first, they are so arranged, but without comma between family name and given name.

Parentheses used in connection with a name indicate which part of the full name is usually deleted in common usage. Hence Johnson, E(lizabeth) Mary indicates that the usual form of the given name is E. Mary. In alphabetizing this type, the parentheses are not considered. However if the name is recorded Johnson, (Elizabeth) Mary, signifying that the entire name Elizabeth is not commonly used, the alphabetizing would be arranged as though the name were Johnson, Mary.
